Staines is a prosperous market town on the banks of the Thames at the point where the river Colne joins the main stream. It boasts a considerable antiquity being identical with the Roman Ad Pontes. In the vicinity is the "London Stone," a rough column raised on a pedestal, marking the boundary of the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor of London (now the Thames Conservancy). The parish church of St. Mary the Virgin was erected in 1828, with the exception of the tower, which was built in 1631 by Inigo Jones.
